so, in 1994, legislation tied the money the federal government sent to the cities and states to local arrest statistics: the more people arrested for drug offenses, the more money